Learning Journal Exercise #2:

There are two separate topics I would like you to address in this week's reflective journal:

1) Now that you have begun working in your groups, roles are become more well defined. We did an exercise on Friday the 13th to help you see how your group views your roles in the group. How did they view you? Do you feel that those views were accurate? Which parts were inaccurate? If there are large discrepancies between their view of you and your self-view, describe two concrete ways you could change their views.

2) As we approach the first exam, what are your specific expectations/fears surrounding it? What percent of questions do you think will come from the lecture materials on Mondays? What percent of questions do you think will come from our Wednesday and Friday lectures? What percent do you think will be only from readings? List three topics that you think will be covered on the test. Finally, create a question that you think would measure how much a student has learned on one of the three topics you selected.

Please submit this Learning Journal as a word document attachment to blowers@engr.arizona.edu so we can reduce the amount of paper used!
